

Windham Public Library Report February 2019

February was a busy month in the children's room. We continued our monthly programs, with families enjoying Angry Birds catapults and 8-bit Art. The Cornerstones of Science program was about rocks and minerals this month, and we hung up various birthstones in different gem cuts for families to explore. We also hosted a Take Your Child to the Library Day/Valentine's Day party and despite the weather, had a few families enjoying the activities spread throughout the children's room. Over February vacation, we hosted active yoga and Zumba programs, a children's book discussion group, time to use our Dash & Dot robots, and fun Minute-to-Win-It games for the whole family. Story times and outreach programs continue to do well. We took down the February interactive love messages from the glass in the circulation area, to give a clear view of our up and coming ducklings. Stop in to see them!

The library hosted its first Black History Month movie series. We had 3 Friday evening movies with modest attendance: four participants for "Selma" (a recounting of the 1965 civil-rights march from Selma, Alabama), thirteen for "A Raisin in the Sun" (which coincidentally was the February selection for the library's Book Group), and five for "42" (a biopic about the first black ballplayer to integrate into baseball's Major League in 1947). If staff scheduling allows, we hope to try other evening movie series in the future.

The library book group read and had a lively discussion about the book "A Raisin in the Sun" by Lorraine Hansberry. This book discussion was a continuation of the Maine Humanities Council "Let's Talk About It" series The Way We Were, The Way We Are: Seasons in the Contemporary American Family. Libby Bischof facilitated the group discussion. Next month's selection is Ordinary People by Judith Guest.

Finally, we have added some items of note to our print collection. The 2019 World Book Encyclopedia is available in the Children's Room. We have moved the 2017 version to the Adult Non-fiction collection and donated our 2014 set to a local school library. In addition, we have the new 2019 Maine Register and a brand new Scholastic set of country books.
